Flight reviews for older pilots need to assess how competent they are in terms of pre-flight planning; their decision making; their ability to acquire weather information to make go/no-go decisions; and their ability to understand the equipment they are using and its limitations. They should review aviation regulations that may have faded from their memory. The CFI should assess any physiological deficiencies that may affect the pilot's performance.

We should share an accurate briefing with the pilot and ask how things went for them and ask what the pilot thought of the flight. The pilot and the CFI should then create a plan to maintain and improve the pilot's proficiency and promote flight safety.
