In this presentation, Brian Schiff and Tammy Barlette break down an accident from both the aeronautical and mental perspectives, highlighting the human factors, cognitive traps, and decision-making errors that led a competent professional to make fatal choices in the cockpit.

Pilots will learn practical strategies to recognize when ego is driving the airplane, safely manage the “step-up” to more capable machines, and build a mental game that is at least as strong as their bank account and logbook.

Registration is not required. After viewing the program, WINGS Credit is earned immediately upon successful completion of a short quiz. The link to that quiz is on the page noted below.
