Richard McSpadden, Executive Director, AOPA's Air Safety Institute

The Air Safety Institute is committed to reducing general aviation mishaps by providing free educational resources, analysis, and outreach while supporting AOPA initiatives that improve general aviation safety and grow the pilot population.

Richard is a commercial pilot and CFI with over 4,500 hours in 30 years of flying a variety of civilian and military aircraft. He has extensive experience in aviation safety, including ground, flight, and special event operations. Richard currently owns a 1955 Piper Super Cub and flies a family Navion. He previously owned a Cherokee 140 aircraft that he used to instruct his son to a successful completion of his private pilot certificate.

Prior to joining the Air Safety Institute, Richard had a successful career at Hewlett Packard leading large, geographically dispersed operations providing business-critical information technology services. Prior to HP, Richard closed his 20-year Air Force career as the Commander and Flight Leader of the U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds flight demonstration team where he headed the U.S. Air Force's flagship organization and led over 100 flight performances.
