

Becoming an Appropriately Confident Pilot - Marc Epner - Monthly Safety Meeting at PWK by CEPA

Event Details

Pilots and their passengers want the PIC to be many things, all contributing to a safe and enjoyable experience, attributes that culminate in a confident pilot. But confidence can come from multiple sources, some of which gives a false sense of confidence. Join the discussion on being an appropriately confident pilot.

Marc Epner started his love affair with aviation when as a young boy. After earning his private pilot license in 1976, he lost his medical in 1979.

He didn't step back in a GA airplane for 25 years. A chance flight in 2004 reminded him how much he loved flying and started him down a path of taking his skills to the next level. Today Marc has accumulated almost 2700 hours, earned multiple ratings, purchased a Cirrus SR22, and co-founded Leading Edge Flying Club at Chicago Executive airport. Marc shares his love of aviation with others via presentations, discussions, and his YouTube channel, "PF Flying"

Harper College, Prospect Heights campus sits on the east side of Wolf Rd., about ¼ mile south of Chicago Executive Airport. There's plenty of parking available.
