

As PIC I Must Know What I Do Not Know

The hardest question for an experienced pilot may be whether you can recognize when the things that you normally rely on have stopped working. That's actually because you are already good at what you do. So, this seminar introduces new techniques for recognizing when your normal techniques and fall-backs may no longer be working, before a mistake becomes consequential. Using accident investigations, FAA guidance, and NASA/ASRS reports of successful interventions, we examine how expectation, familiarity, habit, and changing operational conditions can conceal developing vulnerability. The techniques help pilots expose assumptions, preserve options, interrupt an unresolved situation, and verify that the operational picture has actually been restored.
